This is a very long low house of five bays. It is very long and narrow. The roof is a gently sloped A-roof. The right three bays of the house, including the door, are of stuccoed brick. The left two bays, including a catslide roofed addition, are of squared log, stuccoed over. The first story windows are 6/6, while the second story windows, which are very small, have modern sashes. There is an enclosed chimney on the right end of the house. The roof of the house has an A-shape, except on the left two bays where it extends out in the back to form a catslide. Three generations of the Brown family, who were all iron workers, lived in this house.

The barn at the rear of the property is also constructed of logs, now covered with clapboard.

This property is important as one of the few surviving log structures. The log barn is especially _rare_. The barn is to be taken down + preserved by Ed Plumstead, nearby, in the spring of 1969.

Condition: Good, but unrestored
